Wrinkles Solved

"There will be no problem of wrinkled caps and gowns this year," announced Howard Keilhough.

A new movable closet has been erected in the bookstore to house the caps and gowns.

"Last year the gowns were wrinkled from being folded in boxes but this new closet will solve this problem," Keilhough told reporters today.

Are you one of the people who wonder why the Collegiate is not published every week, or why all of the sports are not included on the sports page, or why the news is no longer news when it is finally published? If you are, you need wonder no longer. It is your fault.

There are approximately five people majoring in journalism at C.B.C. The majority of these people are engaged in part-time work on the student newspaper. This makes publishing a weekly paper a very dreary job for the three or four people who actually work on it.

Student volunteers are needed. News writers, joke writers, sports columnists, and people with noses for news can contribute.

You can help us. If you are a member of an organization or club, we would appreciate your letting us know when you plan something. If you know of something which would be of interest to the student body it would be good of you to clue us in. Bring us a joke, a letter to the editor, or any other publishable information. We'll be glad to edit anything.

CBC Scholars Return

Three members of CBC's chapter of Phi Theta Kappa, national junior college honor society have returned from the national convention in San Antonio, Texas.

President of the honor society Ron Richeson, next years president Don Eisenbarth, and advisor Miss Katherine Schilberg traveled from Pendleton airport to San Antonio with three members of the Everett chapter of Phi Theta Kappa.

Thursday morning, April 20 the delegates attended their first session of the convention and the afternoon was spent touring the city followed by supper and a night in Old San Antone.

It sometimes rains in Pasco.

Friday workshops and committee meeting were attended. CBC's delegates served on a committee which checked the validity of the credentials of all chapters present. Richeson was chairman of the committee. The remainder of the day was spent sight-seeing after which a banquet in the roof garden of the Hilton Hotel and a dance at San Antonio Junior College were attended. Some of the delegates also visited the establishment that housed the local beatniks.

The convention officially ended Saturday with a general session in which sites for the 1960 and 1961 conventions were announced, and new national officers elected. Of the 406 delegates the members from CBC and Everett had traveled the farthest to attend the convention.

Mickey Mouse Is OSC Prexy Choice

(ACP)—Mickey Mouse is an approved candidate for student body president at Oregon State College, reports the Daily Barometer.

Approval came by telegram from Walt Disney studios in Hollywood: "Regret Walt in Europe but see no reason why Mickey wouldn't make good student body president. Better he should be a top man in journalism school. He would have sharp nose for news."

In connection with their campaign, Mouse constituents have challenged other presidential candidates to an open debate. "We don't need a man to do a mouse's job," commented one of the Mouse campaign managers.

Modern Art Is Blasted

(ACP) — Modern art has reached the point where it all looks alike, in the opinion of one Fresno City College art instructor.

"At some of the big shows one gets the feeling that all the work could have been done by one person," Walter E. Witt told an FCC Rampage reporter.

"The individualists have defeated their purpose," Witt said, "but as long as handwriting is different we're going to have different expressions in art."

Where does he think art will go from here? "If I knew I'd be a rich man in five or 10 years."

Witt was reminded of a saying he had heard: "The modern artist is like an oyster fisherman; he has to go farther into the water for each catch."

As an afterthought, he added, "And some of them are in over their heads, and will drown fast if they don't watch out."

The CBC gymnasium contains a removable wall which will someday be removed.

Bruins End Discrimination

(ACP) — From the UCLA Daily Bruin comes the report of a "prejudice-proof" grading system for UCLA's Law School.

The new system resulted from a fight between a student and a professor who allegedly failed him because of "political disagreements," and destroyed his examination paper to prevent recourse.

In the new grading system, numbers are assigned to final exam papers and professors have no access to students' names. Grading is by number only. Not until grades are entered and distributed can a professor find out a student's number, but he can add or subtract three points from a student's grade for class participation and attendance before seeing the number.

"This gives a student complete freedom to say what he wants in class, and it discourages the kind of student that curries favor," says the Daily Bruin.

Prof. Sleeps Student Vexed

(ACP) — Duke University's Chronicle reports the plight of the graduate student faced with the opportunity to excel who encountered unexpected opposition.

The student, enrolled in a course under a prominent professor of military history, was permitted to lecture to his class.

As he was about to reach the climax of his lecture, he glanced up, and to his dismay discovered that his professor had fallen asleep.

Sprinter Leads Hawks Sherlock Marks Set

By DENNIS MCGRAW

Two record-shattering performances by ace sprinter Warren Sherlock, headlined an outstanding Columbia Basin College showing at the Sixth Annual Bill Martin Invitational Relays at Walla Walla Saturday.

Sherlock ran the 100-yard dash in 9.6 seconds to better his own mark of 10 flat set in Pasco earlier in the season. He was also clocked at 21.2 in the 220 to snap his own mark of 21.6.

Other Hawk blue ribbon winners were C. W. Brown, who cleared 12' 10" in the pole vault, and Dallas Barnes, who flipped the javelin 183 feet and copped the broad jump with a leap of 20' 8½".

Hansen's crew travels to Wenatchee today to compete in a Northern Division track meet and will meet Clark in Vancouver, Friday.

Delegate Tells Of MUN Trip

By KEITH STONE

(Ed. Note: The following is a delegate's view of the recent Model United Nations for college students at the University of California in Berkeley. Four CBC students attended.

There were a great many interesting facets within the MUN; however, the most fascinating was the people. At the conference one could find people of every race, color, and creed. The majority of the delegations were composed of political science and law students.

Also, those in attendance were the better students scholastically. At the larger colleges, a student had to be on the honor roll to even be considered. This, of course, was required as a matter of honor for the college and the students.

The atmosphere of the session was also very interesting. The delegates, on the most part, were on their own. They had to uphold the honor of their schools and their countries. In as much as they were representing a particular country and the object was to become a native, that is to act, feel, and think like a loyal delegate from their respective countries, the delegates accepted a necessary air of dignity.

Cone Price Is Political Issue

(ACP) — In bold headlines, the Daily Californian proclaims that the nicer ice cream cone is back on the University of California at Berkeley campus.

Students may now choose between 5 or 10 cent cones instead of 10 or 15 cent cones.

The ice cream cone price has been a major issue at Cal Executive Committee meetings. For changing the cone cost, supporters offered the argument, "It's spring time."

The conference also had an educational value. It was an intellectual experience as well as an opportunity to learn about the physical workings of the UN. It was a chance to objectively discuss the theories and ideas which some day may lead to the solving of the problems which confront us as world citizens.

Potatoes were first grown in South America.

Survival Under Soviets Preferable To Suicide

(ACP)—In a faculty forum column in Follins College (Fla.) "Sandspur," a Rollins professor of economics states his position on atomic warfare:

"The current American 'party line' is that Communism is mankind's greatest enemy and that freedom as we know it must be preserved at all costs, including nuclear war.

"At Norwich University in Vermont, which is the country's oldest military college, upperclassmen revolted in various ways against what they called too much 'militarism' at the school.

"At Dartmouth College, where heretofore students have shown an apathy toward political matters, sign-carrying demonstrators picketed an ROTC parade on the college 'green.'

"And at dozens of other American colleges and universities, pacifist lecture and discussion groups are coming into vogue, most of them protesting the military in general and atomic weapons in particular.

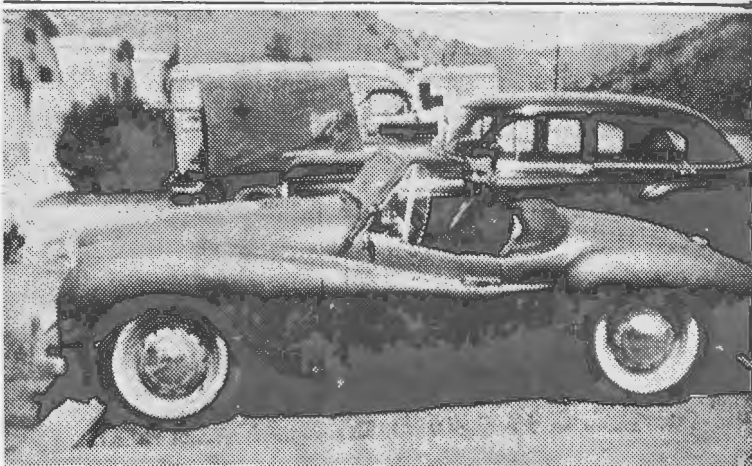

"All of this, by no means, points up any new trend or fad among college students. These activist demonstrations are still no more than scattered ripples on a broad sea of apathy, such as we find here at SMU. One would be hard put to cite these ripples as any sign of a Great Reawakening of collegiates. But it may be possible to project that these few instances are a hint of the path the awakening will take if it ever comes.

"For pacifism, in any way one chooses to define it, is an attractive path for many students who, not wanting to assume a Beatnik rejection of the total society, but still needing to rebel against it, can center out war as a natural target. Most of us hold to pacifist ideas: We want peace and we hate war and killing. Moreover, few of us look forward to being dragged into military service. So it is quite conceivable that college students may tend toward pacifism. They, more than anyone else of their generation, are preparing for the future, a future they don't want to see destroyed at the flick of a switch.

"But, unfortunately, as noble as the ideals of the pacifists may be, they don't apply to this world in its present state. The Russian hawks appear in the feathers of doves but their talons are never hid. Red rocketse into space send back much that is shared with the world, information labeled 'to aid peaceful coexistence.' But more comes back and finds its way into the heart of an ICBM labeled 'New York City, Washington and points west.'

"'Peace in our time' is a pretty promise and we may have it yet. But it won't come because UC, Norwich, Dartmouth or SMU abolishes its ROTC program. It will come as those programs and the products they produce become too strong for any nation to challenge them,"
